European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System (ECTS)

What is ECTS?

ECTS (European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System) is a standardised learner-centred system for credit accumulation and transfer designed to make higher education institution studies clear, comparable and transferable across Europe. Its objective is to facilitate the planning, delivery and evaluation of study programmes and student mobility by recognising learning achievements, qualifications and periods of learning.

More information about ECTS

How does it work?

- Measures Workload & Learning – ECTS credits represent the total amount of study time (lectures, seminars, assignments, independent study) required to achieve specific learning outcomes.
- 1 Full Academic Year = 60 credits – A standard full-time academic year consists of 60 ECTS credits. Individual courses are assigned a specific number of credits (usually in whole numbers) based on the required workload.
- Credits earned at one higher education institution can be officially recognized and counted toward a qualification at another.

A typical 'short cycle qualification' includes 90-120 ECTS credits. A 'first cycle' (or bachelor's) degree consists of either 180 or 240 ECTS credits. Usually a 'second cycle' (or master's) degree equates to 90 or 120 ECTS credits. The use of ECTS at the 'third cycle', or PhD level, varies.

ECTS supports student mobility between higher education institutions. Course catalogues, Learning Agreements, and Transcripts of Records support the recognition and transfer of credits students earn during a mobility period abroad.

Why is ECTS needed?

Differences between national higher education systems can create problems with the recognition of qualifications and mobility periods abroad. This issue is addressed in part by improving understanding of the learning outcomes and workload of programmes of study.

ECTS also makes it possible to blend different learning styles, such as university and work-based learning, within the same programme of study or through lifelong learning.
